Not illustrated. 1818 Excerpt: .at 15 sh/lings a bushel; U caused a tolerably good cow to sell for 20 pounds; it caused a cart-colt, two year old, to sell for 40 pounds; it caused manufactured goods to sell in the same proportion; it caused a day labourer to receive 30 pence a day. This was the state of things, for many years up to ISI Ju. Thi was the state of things, in which the people of England had lons; lived. This had been llie state df things ever since all the young farmers, tradesmen, -manufacturers, artizans and labourers became men. They had never had any knowledge of any other state of things. On nn impression, produced in their minds by this state of things; on a view of these prices, compared with the accompanying expeuces of living; on these were all their calculations, all their contracts, all their enterprizes founded: and thus, were the whole of the community living under a necessarily existing opinion and conviction, that these prices were to continue: subject only to those variations in them which might, and which naturaHy would, be produced by the variations in the seasons, the amount of crops, and the vicissitudes of commerce; that is to say, those ordinary variations, with regard to which man has little, or nothing to do, and for which an allowance is made by every farmer, trader, and labourer of whatever description. This being lhe state of things, John Bi, UNT(not oneof the servile wretches...
