Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Soul Songs In putting forth a fourth book of verse that cannot find a publisher, a reader or a friend, I hardly know what to say. Perhaps the plain blunt truth is best. In the opinion of publishers, the persons to whom I presented copies of the work, and to my narrower circle of acquaintances, my poetry, to put it in the expression of the street, is not worth a salted damn. I have sometimes agreed in the judgment and wished it were all in oblivion. Again when reading I have felt a quickening of spirit and been restored to faith. Perhaps it is but another of the infinite deceptions that selfishness plays upon the self. It is certainly a hard time for poetry. A communication concerning a book of verse is sometimes not even answered; some publishers will not look at such a manuscript and one declares there is but one chance in a thousand for such a venture. Why is this? Poetry has long been considered the very heart of literature and the breath and fine spirit of all knowledge. No doubt a complexity of causes causes the present state of public opinion, but cannot one of the chief reasons be found in the poor quality of much of the present day verse. It seems to have everything of poetry but a head and heart. It does not say much and lacks the vitality that is the soul and creates a body of beauty and music. It lacks the great characteristics of life - passion, spontaneity, freshness, penetration and delight. Give us the real genuine lyrical virtue, something that has the man, the...
